BUTLER HEARD FROM.

He Wants to Enjoin the President and Stop Execution of Cattle Proclamation.

New YORK, Aug. 31.-A Long Branch special to the Herald, says, the Herald published recently a telegram announcing that Gen. Benjamin F. Butler had pald a visit to Black Island, about which there was more or less mystery.

"I don't think there is any secrecy concerning it nor any attempt to conceal the real object. The real cause of the visit was the order of President Cleveland directing the owners of cattle on the Indian lands in the west to vacate their grazing ground. Gen. could be determined by the courts.

Gen. Butter's object was to present the matter to Judge Miller, Judge Blackford being absent from his circuit and not easy of access. Gen. Butler, as I said, represents many millions of dollars invested by his clients, and presented very common reasons for some order that would protect them. The desired order was not issued and I did not hear any of the conversation with Justice Miller about it, and I do not know what his views upon the question are."

Col. Corkhill then said that there had undoubtedty been frauds committed, yet many honest men had invested money in the business supposing everything to be right, honest and legal, and now the order of President Cleveland is per-emptory, summary and dictatorial. He says they must go and go at once. Now about this order, there will surely be a fight. The cattle will not be moved. You could not move a colored picnic, let alone about 500,000 head cattle, by any proclamation yet issued from the president or anyone

Yes, the fight will be made. It inries, the light will be made. It involves the important questions of the rights of property, the power of the Indian to make contracts, and the power and authority of the government to interfere. ### TYLER.

A New Inventton in Steam Mechanics.

correspondence of the Gazette LONGVIEW, TEX., Aug. 31.-Mr. D. D. Pinkham, a long time resident of this city, and a thorough machinist, has invented, It is true, as stated in these dispatches, merous congratulatory greetings of his brother machinists and engineers from all points, is to very soon take the places of the present styles of stationary engines. The invention effects more especially the cylinder and its mechanism, and to make it more perfectly understood, the following description of one which is now running at the Longview machine shops is given. There is but one cylinder, having a head on each end, a recess midway, and an opening at the recess, the opening being closed up by a cap. This can be removed to obtain access to the working parts of the engine. The recess contains oil in which runs the crank, and which automatically lubricates the working parts. The recess is large enough to admit of a stroke equal to or more than the diameter of the cyl-inder. The piston is cast in one piece. There are slots at the middle of the pis-ton at both the bottom and top sides, which are somewhat longer than the proclamation ordering the removal of stroke, having the longer sides parallel to cattle ranches from the Cheyenne and each other and to the line of stroke. The heads of each end of piston are perfectly packed. Midway in each side of the cylinder are journal boxes, each having an extension which fits into its corresponding pisten slot, which act as guides to the piston, keeping it always true, and thus perfectly preventing any unequal wearing of the cylinder and consequent pounding and blowing. A shaft passes through the journal boxes and is provided with a crank connected to one or both the piston heads by a pitman. The boxes have perfectly conical bushings. Ports at each end of the cylinder admit steam from the steam chest, in which work slide valves. These latter are connected to a yoke which is slotted at both top and bottom, through which passes the end of a cam on the shaft, the cam giving a reciprocatory motion to the yoke. The openings midway of the piston are passages for the ends of the crank-shaft, while the crank passes through the cylinder, opening at each revolution, dipping into the oil. The motion of the yoke is not like that of an eccentric-slow and regular, but is rapid for a portion of the stroke, and then rests while the cam passes from one side to the other. The parts are thus opened and closed with a rapidity that insures a high rate of speed. There are two cams, one of which is fastened as an eccentric; the other being the cut-off cam, is loose on the shaft, and is operated by an automatic governor. The cut-off as used by Mr. Pinkham, is a great economy, the short portage and the perfect action of the automatic cam allowing the use of the entire force of the steam, it being enabled to expand to its fullest extent before exhaust. On Satur day night after reaching the city, Tate said publicly to a number of people that he had rendered no decision and that was repeated in a dispatch from Toledo. McCaffrey's backer, Billy O'Brien, claims that it should at least be decided a draw. The conditions which have never been formally published, nor accurately stated, are in the form of an agreement substantially that Dominick McCaffrey agrees to meet J. L. Sullivan in a 6-round glove contest at Chester Park, August 29th, Marquis of Queensbury rules to govern, using three-ounce gloves, referee to be chosen at the time. Principals to appear between 2 and 6 pm. The original drafts shows the clause "scientific points to counts" stricken out. It also shows that gloves were to be agreed on at the time of meeting. This is stricken out at Sullivan's sugges-tion, and three-ounce gloves inserted. O'Brien claims that with the clause, scientific points to count" stricken out the contract would make it a draw at the end of six rounds, unless one had won before that time, and that they must either so decide it or go on to a finish. McCaffrey wanted to finish at the end of the sixth round, but Sullivan declined, as the decision was made in his favor.

McCaffrey claims that he is not bound to take notice of the challenge of Sullivan published in last nights dispatches until Sullivan replies to his challenge covering his deposit of forfeit money. Besides he says the man who made the challenge is not authorized to do so by Sullivan.

The principals are both here yet and will await the decision of the question of superiority.
